New Supervising Attorney joins the Duke Law Community Economic Development Clinic

Noemi Flores joined the Duke Law faculty this fall as the Supervising Attorney for the Law School’s Community Economic Development Clinic. Prior to joining Duke Law, Ms. Flores practiced full-time with Gardner Carton & Douglas LLP, in the firm's Chicago office. Ms. Flores’ private practice was concentrated in the areas of corporate and securities law. She represented public and private companies in financing, securities and general corporate transactions. Additionally, Ms. Flores represented public companies in connection with corporate governance and securities compliance matters.

During law school Ms. Flores represented non-profits and small business owners as a student and teaching assistant in the Non-Profit Organizations/Small Business Clinic at Columbia University School of Law. Ms. Flores counseled non-profits in the start-up phase as well as established non-profits on a variety of tax-exempt and corporate governance matters. Ms. Flores also worked with low-wealth entrepreneurs who were in the start-up phases of their businesses.

Mr. Flores is licensed to practice law in Illinois. She plans to sit for the North Carolina bar in 2004. She is a member of the American Bar Association and the ABA's Business Law Section.

Ms. Flores served as a board member of two non-profit community organizations in Chicago and hopes to join non-profit boards in the Triangle in the near future.

Ms. Flores speaks Spanish, French and Italian.

Ms. Flores has an A.B. in Literature, magna cum laude, from Harvard University and a J.D. from Columbia University School of Law.