Message from the Dean

This placement bulletin is designed to help you with a difficult and important task—the selection of new talent. The young lawyers whose backgrounds are described in this publication were carefully chosen from outstanding college graduates throughout the country, and have successfully completed two years of vigorous training at Duke. We take pride in their accomplishments and look forward to their successful careers at the bar.

The number of lawyers visiting us to interview students increases each year. We can, however, still provide you with space in the Law Building for the interviewing of both third-year and second-year students if you give us reasonable notice and permit us to arrange a schedule for you. You are welcome to visit us, talk with our students and faculty, and see our school.

We hope you will not limit your consideration to students with a specified class rank. Class standards in a highly selected group of students—much alike in ability and dedication—often reflect a fortuitous variation in cumulative averages of a fraction of a point, a variation that may be attributable to varying grading standards of different teachers or selection of elective courses. We believe that our careful recommendations are a more reliable basis for prediction of future performance. We shall recommend only those who can serve in your organization with distinction.

Sincerely yours,

[Signature]

Professor Latty discusses business associations
Students

The Duke Law School student body of 1968-1969, consisting of approximately 330 students, comes from 40 states and over 80 colleges. In recent years entering classes at Duke have had an undergraduate academic average of well above 3 on a 4-point system and median Law School Admission Test scores in the middle 600's.

The geographical distribution of the school is approximately as follows: 30% Northeast, 30% Midwest, 25% South, and 15% West. Upon graduation Duke law students practice in nearly every state.

History

Duke University is built around Trinity College, which traces its origins to 1838, when Union Institute was founded. The teaching of law as part of the cultural education marked the beginning of legal instruction here in 1850. Professional education in the law began in 1868 when the Department of Law of Trinity College was established. The Centennial of Legal education at Duke was recently observed.

The modern School of Law was founded in 1904 upon an endowment established by James B. and Benjamin N. Duke. A distinguished lawyer, scholar and teacher, Dr. Samuel Fox Mordecai, organized the school and served as its Dean until his death in 1927.

Since the foundation of Duke University in 1924, the School of Law has shared in the University's growth and development. In 1960, with the completion of the new law building, and the appointment of an enlarged faculty and staff, the School of Law entered a new state. Reorganization included broadening the curriculum and professional activities, with the result that a progressive law school of national scope and character was established.

Publications

DUKE LAW JOURNAL

The Duke Law Journal, edited entirely by a board of student editors, carries forward the American tradition of student-managed legal publications. The Journal, which is published in six issues each year, offers scholarly articles by distinguished members of the profession, as well as casenotes and comments written by upperclassmen. The Journal assumes its share of the responsibility for the development of legal writing skills among non-Journal members of the Law School community. The Contributor Program, in which second-year students may participate, offers an opportunity to write under the guidance of a member of the Journal's Editorial Board. Those whose efforts meet the rigorous Journal standards may be invited to join the Editorial Board the following year. A program whereby similar editorial assistance will be given to third-year students is to begin this year.

LAW AND CONTEMPORARY PROBLEMS

Now in its thirty-third volume, Law and Contemporary Problems is a quarterly presenting in each issue a symposium on a problem of current import, in which the economic, political, and other social science im-lications, as well as the legal aspects, are discussed by experts in various disciplines and official positions. The publication has been widely praised and found useful by lawyers, social scientists, government agencies, public and university libraries, and industrial and financial concerns. Recent symposia have been published on such subjects as privacy, banking regulation, anti-poverty programs, uniformity in financial accounting, and propaganda control. Faculty-edited with substantial help from student editorial assistants, "L&CP" is a valuable complement to the student-edited Duke Law Journal and an important contribution to legal scholarship.

CORPORATE PRACTICE COMMENTATOR

The Corporate Practice Commentator, a quarterly periodical devoted to significant developments and new thinking in the field of corporate law and practice, is edited by Professor F. Hodge O'Neal. Although it is published by a commercial firm, it is assembled and its manuscripts are prepared at the School of Law. The Commentator gives attention to matters of interest and importance to counselors of corporate and other business enterprises. Primary emphasis is placed on corporation law and practice in the narrow sense, but considerable attention is devoted to antitrust questions, labor matters, patents and copyrights, executive compensation, fair trade legislation, and other matters arising from business activities.

Activities

DUKE BAR ASSOCIATION

The Duke Bar Association coordinates the professional, social, and other extra-curricular activities of the student body. The Association resembles, in its composition and purpose, both a university student government and a professional bar association. In a real sense, it is the center of the Law School's non-academic life.

Through its various committees, the D.B.A. conducts a wide variety of activities: assisting in moot court competition, publicizing Law School activities, obtaining speakers and sponsoring athletic and social programs. The association has worked actively toward the realization of a top-flight local Legal Assistance Program to be staffed by students during the school year. The Association also sponsors the intra-school newspaper, The Devil's Advocate. An elected Judicial Board administers the Law School Honor Code, with D.B.A. support.

INTERNATIONAL LAW SOCIETY

A charter member (with Columbia, Harvard, Virginia, and Yale) of the Association of Student International Law Societies, the Duke International Law Society offers a program dealing with the study and application of international law to world problems. The "Short Course" series of lecture-discussions and distinguished speakers, and the national biennial conferences

Reunion at Law Day 1966: Charles S. Rhyne '37, former president of ABA; Robert C. Finley '34, Chief Justice, Supreme Court of Washington; Dean Latty; Richard M. Nixon '37.
bring members of the Society together with the men and ideas that are shaping international law.

The Society also participates in the annual Philip C. Jessup International Law Moot Court Competition, of which the Duke team is defending National Champion, having won this honor in the 1968 Competition.

MOOT COURT BOARD

Recognizing its responsibility to provide its students with skill in oral argumentation, the Law School provides a wide range of Moot Court opportunities. The Law School enters moot court teams in both the National Moot Court Competition and the Philip C. Jessup International Law Society Moot Court Competition. In 1965 and again in 1966, the National Team won the Southeastern regional competition and placed second in the national competition. In 1968, the International Team won the Jessup Competition, being cited as writers of the best brief in the competition, with one member being cited as best oralist.

The responsibility for the success of this program rests to a large extent with the Moot Court Board, comprised entirely of students, which selects the National Moot Court Team, and constructs the problems to be used in the first-year (Hardt Cup) and second-year (Dean's Cup) competition. The Board has also had the honor, in recent years, of bringing to Duke many distinguished jurists to serve as honorary justices in the final rounds of these competitions.

LEGAL INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

For the fourth successive year, the School of Law, with the aid of grants from the National Defender Project, has conducted a summer internship program in the administration of criminal justice. The program, which was organized and is directed by Professor Everett, brings the student interns into contact with a variety of problems in criminal law, as they participate, under the supervision of qualified lawyers, in the investigation and preparation of cases for trial.

LEGAL RESEARCH PROGRAM

The Legal Research Program is designed to provide students with an opportunity to prepare intensive legal memoranda on current problems submitted by practicing lawyers, judges or legislative committees. Supervised by an Editorial Board, the program provides students meaningful experience in research, writing and editing, thus aiding in the development of practical legal skills.

LEGAL FRATERNITIES

The two legal fraternities at Duke are Hughes Inn of Phi Delta and Wiley Rutledge Chapter of Phi Alpha Delta. During the academic year, these organizations supplement the extra-curricular program by sponsoring luncheon meetings featuring distinguished speakers from the legal profession and related disciplines. A number of social activities are also conducted.

RULE OF LAW RESEARCH CENTER

The Duke Law School takes pride in the Rule of Law Research Center, with Professor Arthur Larson, former Director of the U.S. Information Agency, and Consultant to Presidents Eisenhower and Johnson, as its Director. The purpose of the Center is to undertake both long-range and current studies and publications bearing the settlement or international disputes and the achievement of peaceful change under law. The Center also produces studies and publications in the field of civil rights and race relations. A staff of international lawyers is maintained, with undergraduate law students as research assistants. The regular staff includes specialists in the world's major legal systems.
